Book Synopsis:

Friendships should never be taken for granted.

The ups and downs of high school forged an unbreakable bond between Vanessa and Nichole. Summer's over and Vanessa is preparing for life at the local liberal arts college. Without her best friend by her side, Vanessa starts to chart her own path. Navigating new friendships and relationships proves easier said than done.

Nichole got kicked out of her mother's house, lives with strangers in a sketchy neighborhood and commutes across town for her job in retail. She doesn't always make the right choices and she has only herself to blame when things go wrong.

Something's gotta give. Who will make the first move - or will fate intervene to remind each of them of the importance of their bond.

Rachel Barnard Biography:

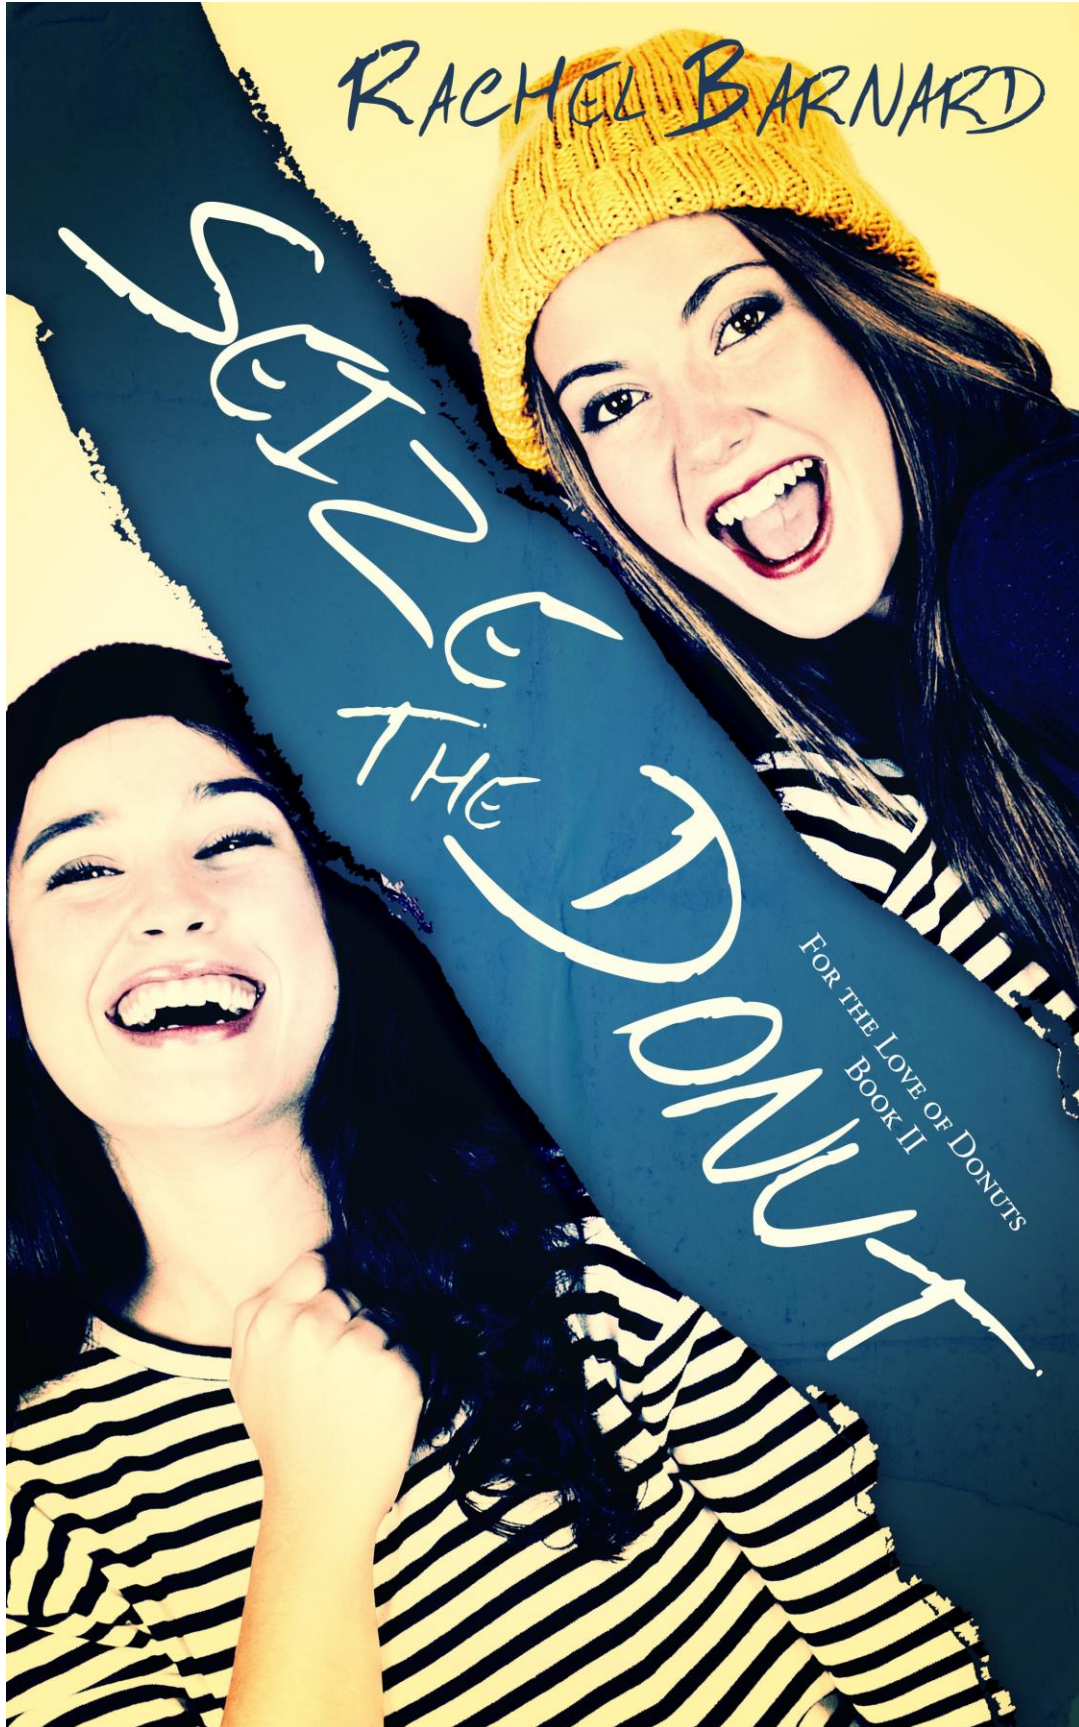

Rachel Barnard's greatest accomplishments were eating an entire half gallon of ice cream in one sitting, winning a boot toss, and writing a novel about herself (see the For the Love of Donuts Books). Rachel Barnard wishes she were taller, that chocolate had no calories, and that books could be eaten after they were read. Rachel Barnard resides in the Pacific Northwest and loves to dress up, talk about writing and books, and dance.
